The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 11TH, 1892.

We have received from Hankow a copy of "The Complete Picture Gallery," of which a brief account taken from a Shanghai contemporary has already appeared in our columns. "The Complete Picture Gallery," we are told in the introduction, is an exact reproduction of one of the numerous publications at present being widely circulated in China by the anti-foreign party. Anything more filthy and disgusting it would be impossible to imagine. To the foreigner unacquainted with Chinese some of the pictures standing alone would appear meaningless, but the translation of the notes by which each is accompanied discloses the horrible purport. Others are plainly obscene and blasphemous, and we can well understand that the book "has not been reproduced without much serious and painful "thought. It was no pleasant task to have "to do with, no matter with how good an "object, the representation of our Adorable "Redeemer as the filthiest of beasts, and his "honoured servants as ghouls and vampires. "But what is to be done?" asks the translator. "These insults to God and humanity "must cease. The ministers and consuls of "foreign powers have often most strongly "represented the matter to the native authorities and to their own Governments, "without producing much effect in any "quarter. The propaganda still goes on. "Shall nothing be done to stop it? Des"perate diseases demand desperate re"medies. It may be that once this matter "is brought, in all its naked hideousness, "under the eyes of those in authority, "and the leaders of public opinion in home "lands, some Christian state will be stirred "up to demand, with an emphasis sufficient"ly pronounced that China will not dare to "disregard it, the total suppression of this "class of literature. If this is not done, "then the years to come will be years of "blood." Such is the justification for the reproduction of this vile book for foreign readers, and its sufficiency can hardly be called in question.

The reproduction is entitled "The Cause of the Riots in the Yangtsze Valley." That the anti-foreign literature was the immediately exciting cause of the riots there can now be no doubt, and there is only too much reason to believe that it has the secret countenance of the Imperial Government. At the open ports, where the pressure of foreign public opinion is felt, some obstacles may be placed in the way of its circulation, but in the interior there is no real attempt made to put it down. For an official to be anti-foreign is regarded as patriotic and is at the same time a cheap and easy method of attracting the notice of superiors. Here, it is truly remarked, is the root and core of the whole matter. Incorporated with the reproduction of the "Complete Picture Gallery" is "A Review," in which the whole question of the attitude of the Chinese Government towards foreigners in general and missionaries in particular is discussed, and a parallel is drawn between the events preceding the recent riots and those that preceded the Tientsin Massacre and other anti-foreign outbreaks. The case of the writer is that the Government had certain anti-missionary proposals to make, and intended carrying them by means of anti-missionary disturbances. A feature of the Tientsin Massacre time was that the troubles were simply preliminary to, and intended to emphasize, certain hostile proposals of the Government called the "Eight Articles," and such, it seems, is the case again. The cleverness of the Government in giving a false explanation of the riots, an explanation which for a time was accepted in good faith, is also commented on, and a reference is made to Mr. DRUMMOND which it would be interesting to see answered by that gentleman. It was officially communicated to the foreign Powers that the riots were due to an anti-dynastic movement, and that the Kolao-hui had adopted this plan of involving China in a war with some foreign Power as a means of overthrowing the Government. "The same information was "furnished to a learned and talented gen"tleman in Shanghai, who is the trusted "adviser of the Chinese high officials in all "difficult matters, and by him communicated "to the foreign press. He, no doubt, was "fully persuaded of its truth, as most people "were when the idea was first propounded." If Mr. DRUMMOND was thus led off the scent at first he has doubtless since, taking into account the character of the communications first made to him and reading them in the light of subsequent events, been able to get somewhere near the bottom of the movement. There may be reasons why it would be inconvenient at present for the learned gentleman to make public all he knows and the opinions he has formed on that knowledge, but it is to be hoped he will do so at some time or other. The effect of the statement that the movement was anti-dynastic was that the fear of helping to pull down the Central Government and of throwing a vast Empire into a state of anarchy induced the Powers to hold their hand, and, as the writer tersely puts it, "promised to "give China full freedom in the matter of "rioting without being called to account." It was soon observed, however, the writer goes on to say, that the facts hardly substantiated this ingenious theory; but one rebel, in all, was discovered in the Yangtsze Valley, and he was a foreigner, but by "whom he was hired did not transpire." We agree with the writer that the Kolao-hui theory must be given up. The Society is no doubt a mischievous one, but it can no longer be held responsible for the anti-foreign riots. What explanation, then, is to be found for MASON'S complicity in a supposed rebel movement? Was his hiring part and parcel of the diabolical plot of the disseminators of the anti-foreign literature?

Any one looking through the "Picture Gallery" can well imagine how the minds of the populace must become inflamed by the dissemination of masses of such literature. Mob violence can be readily excited in other countries as well as in China when precautions for the preservation of order are neglected. Indeed, it is only a few weeks ago that a mob wrecked the Mahommedan Mosque in Liverpool, simply out of wantonness and a dislike of foreign innovations. It is easy, then, to understand how the Chinese people may be excited against foreigners and their religion when placards and pamphlets are distributed broadcast representing preaching halls as hotbeds of lasciviousness and the missionaries as being guilty of mutilating women and children. When it is further understood that the Authorities, so far from regarding the use of violence with disfavour, secretly sympathise with it, it would be surprising if violent outbreaks did not occur. It is essential, then, not only in the interests of missionaries, but of foreigners in general, that a stop should be put to the circulation of anti-foreign literature. As a first step a demand ought to be made, and enforced, for the expunging of all references in the Sacred Edict and semi-official blue-books which represent Christianity as a proscribed religion or tend to excite the people against foreigners. The Rev. GRIFFITH JOHN, in a very able article which we have already published, has shown what extensive use is made of the Sacred Edict by the authors of the anti-foreign literature, which, it may be remarked, is not printed for profit, but is distributed gratis. The writers are scholars and men of position who know what they are about, and their condign punishment ought to be made the second point in the demand. An attempt would no doubt be made to substitute some ignorant man who had been employed as an instrument in the distribution of the literature, just as in the case of the Tientsin Massacre the real criminals escaped and men were executed whose complicity in the affair was doubtful and who in any case were mere tools. No trifling of this kind should be allowed. The case is urgent and ought to be so treated by the Foreign Powers, who can now point to one of the principal offenders, CHOU HAN, and ask that he should be made an example of. Negotiation would be futile; the only thing for the Foreign Powers to do is to state clearly their demands and see that they are complied with.

Sir Francis Fleming, K.C.M.G., has been appointed Governor of Sierra Leone.

The ten ex the C. P. steamer Empress of Japan arrived in New York on the 9th instant.

The U.S. flagship Lancaster left the harbour yesterday for a cruise. We understand that on her return she will go into dock.

The Agents (Messrs. Gibb, Livingston & Co.) inform us that the E. & A. steamer Merrimair left Port Darwin for this port yesterday.

The Amateur Dramatic Club have, we are glad to see, decided to give one more performance of the pantomime "Beauty and the Beast," which will take place on Saturday, 20th inst.

Mlle. Olga Dubois's concert takes place to-morrow evening in St. Andrew's Hall and ought to attract a large audience, the programme being, we understand, a very attractive one.

The Agents (Messrs. Arnhold, Karberg & Co.) inform us that the China Mutual steamer Kaisow, from London and Liverpool, passed the Canal on the 9th inst., and may be considered due at Singapore on or about the 1st March.

The steam yacht Saide, of the R.Y.S., arrived here yesterday from Nagasaki. The owner is Mr. C. G. Millar, who is making an extended cruise with a party of friends consisting of Dr. E. Willis Way, Mr. John Reid, and Mr. A. M. Nicholas.

The troopship Himalaya arrived in Singapore on the morning of the 2nd inst. with drafts for the Northamptonshire Regiment there and for the Shropshire Regiment at Hongkong. The Straits Times says she has 3 officers, 204 men, 4 women, and 15 children for Hongkong.

In December, 1891, there were 693 Japanese resident in Seoul, and 2,631 in Chemulpo, and their number, it is stated, is constantly increasing. The Japanese have certainly developed a considerable trade with Korea, and they manage to keep most of it in their own hands, for which no one will blame them.

At the annual meeting of the landrenters at Hankow, held on the 23rd January, on the motion of Dr. Griffith John, the thanks of the landrenters were by acclamation declared to be due to Consul Gardner for the tact, ability, determination, and courage with which he had steered them safely through their late troubles. In acknowledging this the Consul declined to take credit for having done anything extraordinary; he had simply done his duty to the best of his knowledge and ability, and felt grateful that his countrymen were so ready to appreciate well-intentioned effort.

The Independance Tonkinoise says:—We learn from a well-informed source of the death, on the 31st December last, of Si-Votha, the rebel brother of King Noredom of Cambodia. Si-Votha had been for many years a rebel against French authority and a rebel even against the authority of his brother. At one time he was able to attract to his cause many partisans and created grave difficulties for us which we have never been able to overcome completely, for Si-Votha continued to escape. Abandoned little by little by his last friends, Si-Votha lived miserably in the jungle, compelled to find a fresh hiding place every day. It was in those sad conditions that he died, from fatigue, privation, and misery.

According to the Chemulpo correspondent of our Shanghai evening contemporary, the Korean steamer Hai Rioug—which the Hyogo News recently stated is to be converted into an armed cruiser—is in such a condition that the first shot from a heavy gun fired on board her would shake the vessel to pieces. He says the wooden planking is fastened to the frames by iron bolts, and the bottom is sheathed over with Munts metal; on the last occasion she was "stripped," the metal sheathing over the iron bolts had become like blotting-paper, and the bolts were eaten away, in many places by galvanic action, to a small residuum, almost beyond recognition. The pioneer vessel of the Korean navy would therefore not prove very formidable to a foe, though she might turn out a costly and dangerous weapon of defence.

A Chemulpo correspondent of the Mercury says that on New Year's Day the landowners in that settlement received a curious surprise. They received notice from the Acting Commissioner of Customs to pay next day their land taxes and ground rent at the Custom House, which was kept open for that purpose and an assistant was kept there all day to receive the money, but with the exception of a few Customs officials, who are landholders and dared not refuse, no one responded to the invitation. One of the largest landowners returned the interesting document, through his Consul, endorsed with a few appropriate but not complimentary remarks to the Customs, while another landowner, a Britisher, who refused to recognise the action of the Customs, has been summoned, by the Acting Commissioner, before the English Consul. The case is still pending.

Shanghai shareholders in the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank sometimes complain that Hongkong shareholders are placed at an advantage in obtaining early information of the Bank's working, but on this occasion the position seems to have been reversed. Messrs. J. P. Bisset and Co. in their share report dated Shanghai, 29th January, say:—"The result of the half-year's working has been received from Hongkong. The earnings have been 13 lakhs of dollars; of this 5 lakhs will go to contingency account to meet bad and doubtful debts, a dividend of £1 10s. will be paid, and $31,000 carried forward." This information may have been communicated to a favoured few in Hongkong as soon as it was sent to Shanghai, but precautions seem to have been taken against its becoming generally known until it came back from the Northern port.

A correspondent of a Shanghai paper writing from Shaohsing, gives the following details about it:—Shaohsing is a large city; the wall is said to be 40 li round, containing a population of about 350,000 inhabitants; some say 400,000. It is 30 miles S.E. from Hangchow, about 100 English miles W. by N. of Ningpo. It is an ancient and a very conservative city; it supplies Sze-yo's for the eighteen provinces of China; it is the second for size and importance in the province of Chekiang. It is a great place for brass-ware, and it is crowded in many parts of it with tinfoil workers. These men form themselves into clubs, and they have a large contingent fund, which supplies any unfortunate or unruly member the wherewithal to go to law, but they do not always win their cases. They also appear to form a very unruly class, and include a large number of loafers, who prey on strangers visiting the city.

Commenting on the letter addressed by "A." to the N. C. Daily News entitled "Land and Bridges," M. Henri Brvois says:—"The writer of the letter in question quotes my statement as to the action of MM. Lemaire and de Bezaure in obtaining an order for 42 spans of bridging for M. Eiffel, and then without warning suddenly goes on to speak of the French officials who, forgetful of their country's ancient and honourable name, have not demanded sufficient reparation for the Ichang outrage. He cites Ichang. I would remind him of Wuseuh. He accuses my country of not sufficiently protesting its nationals. I say that his country does exactly the same. Does the writer of the letter forget that not far from Ichang, i.e. at Hankow, lie the remains of two of the Wuseuh victims? Where is the vengeance that should have been wreaked for this outrage? What satisfaction has been given for this barbarous crime? I cannot believe that the heads of two coolies, selected at random and doubtless innocent, are sufficient to satisfy the English Government. The truth unfortunately is that the European powers have upheld their prestige very badly in China. It is equally true that our representatives in Peking have been befooled and outwitted by the Chinese diplomatists."

Mr. G. T. M. O'Brien, C.M.G., late Auditor General of Ceylon, has been appointed Colonial Secretary of Hongkong. He was to leave Cyprus for Hongkong on the 9th inst.

We regret to hear of the death of Surgeon-Captain R. H. Smythe, who died at the Civil Hospital yesterday morning. The cause of death was abscess on the liver supervening on an attack of dysentery. The deceased gentleman, who was only twenty-eight years of age, was well known in the Colony, being a prominent figure on the football ground and having taken part as a vocalist in amateur entertainments.

The Nanking correspondent of the Mercury, writing on the 25th ult., says:—There is a great deal being said about Li Hung at the moment, and some account of him and of his notorious father may be interesting. The latter, Li Chao Shen, was born in Honan. At the time of the Taiping Rebellion he took advantage of the disturbed state of the Empire to gather around him a strong band of rude soldiery and robbers, with which the country was swarming at that period, and took possession of a large district north of Nanking, including Chu Chin, Lai-an, and Tsuen-tsiao, which he plundered and harried without check. When the power of the Taipings began to decline he had the sagacity to go over to the Imperialists, who were very glad to receive him into their ranks, for his freebooters were hardy and daring fighting men. He turned the cities he had captured over to the Generals Hiang-yung and Chang Kwoh-liang, who were in command of the Imperial forces then investing Nanking. He soon so distinguished himself that the Emperor gave him the rank of General and decorated him with the yellow jacket. He was next appointed to the command of the camp called "First to Victory." When the rebellion was crushed Tseng Kwo-fan weakened Li's military authority, at first by decreasing the number of soldiers under his command, afterwards, partly in fear that Li's freebooters would break out into mutiny in the camp, and partly to gain favour with the authorities, who always mistreated Li, Tseng turned the whole rascally band over to justice as common robbers. Li was acquitted and allowed to retire into private life. It may be his riches the officials are coveting, or it may be that he is really guilty of the offences charged against him, but at any rate he is involved in some way or other in the trouble in connection with the late riots on the Yangtsze; and although a while back when he was accused Liu Ming-chuan and Kwoh Pao-chang went security for him and he had a respite, he has been seized again and the Emperor memorialised in connection with his case. A Chinaman who is supposed to know a good deal about the affair, when asked for his opinion, said Li Hung is a Lao shih-jen, that is an honest fellow of no great ability, not smart and able like his father. Honesty does not often go hand in hand with ability in China.

THE COMING PRESIDENTIAL CONTEST IN THE UNITED STATES.

It is announced that Mr. James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, will not offer himself as a candidate for election to the Presidency of the United States.

HOCKEY.

A hockey match was played in the Happy Valley yesterday between those over and under 30 years old and resulted in a win for the youngsters by 5 goals to one. After the first five minutes' play Watherston ran the ball up and scored a somewhat flukey goal, but this was shortly afterwards equalised by a goal shot from the scrimmage by Barton. From this point, however, the Youngsters had it very much their own way, and save for some brilliant goalkeeping by Stevens and some good runs by Wallace the "old 'uns" appeared completely outclassed. At half time the score was 3—1, and at the finish the Youngsters won by 5 goals to one as mentioned above. For the winners Watherston, Lewis, and Dunn played the best, and for the "old 'uns" Wallace, Stevens, and Ram did most service. The teams were as follows:—

	Under 30.
Capt. Dunn	F. O. Lewis
Lane	Willis
A. E. Watherston	Phillips
Meynell	E. S. Ezekiel
F. Maitland	Molesworth
C. W. Dickson
	Over 30.
A. G. Stokes	Dick
J. Ezekiel	Ram

HONGKONG JOCKEY CLUB.

An extraordinary general meeting of the members of the Hongkong Jockey Club was held yesterday afternoon at the City Hall to consider the advisability of erecting a new grand stand upon the racecourse. Hon. C. P. Chater occupied the chair and there were also present Hon. T. H. Whitehead, Messrs. J. D. Humphreys, J. Grant, R. M. Gray, Max Grote, and G. S. Coxon (Stewards), E. W. Rutter (Treasurer), Capt. Barker, Messrs. Stokes, H. Humphrey, S. L. Dauby, L. Mendel, Dickson, T. Davies, Orleber, Fuchs, Jones Hughes, Pollarton Henderson, Greason, Brocklemann, Vernon, Osborne Orange, Meyer, J. M. G. Mauuk, H. W. Dick, J. Andrew, L. K. Davis, G. H. Potts, W. Danby, W. H. Wallace, E. S. Ezekiel, T. F. Hough (Clerk of the Course), &c.

The CHAIRMAN said—Gentlemen, as you have learnt by the notice of the meeting which the Clerk has just read, this meeting has been called for the purpose of considering what should be done with regard to a new grand stand. You are probably all aware that the stand is in a very greatly dilapidated state. Last year and again this year we are unable to use the top floor; in fact if it had not been for the fair sum of money which has been spent on the place we should not have been able to use it at all. It is only on sufferance that we can carry this meeting out with the present stand. The Stewards in thinking over the matter decided to write to the Government and ask whether at the end of our lease an extension of the present lease would be granted. We have a letter here from the Governor, received only half an hour ago. Although his Excellency the Governor does not say that the lease will be renewed he makes a promise that he will write to the Secretary of State and try to get his consent to an extension for twenty one years. We have now four more years to run on the old lease and if we get the extension for twenty-one years it will make twenty-five years from now. The plans for the proposed new building have been on exhibition for some time past. The estimated cost is between $19,000 and $20,000. What we are called upon to decide to-day is whether the new stand should be built or the present one repaired; and if the new stand is to be built whether you will authorise the Stewards to make contracts and erect the new building and leave the raising of the funds in the hands of the Stewards. These are the points before you to decide, whether a new stand should be built or whether extensive repairs should be made to the present one.

Mr. H. W. DICK—I beg to propose the resolution which is in the hands of the Clerk of the Course.

The following resolution was then read by Mr. Hough:—"That the Stewards of the Hongkong Jockey Club be, and they are hereby, empowered to proceed to erect a new grand stand and buildings in connection therewith suitable for the requirements of the Hongkong Jockey Club and for the requirements of the public on the occasions of the annual race meetings. That all details in connection with the erection of such new grand stand as well as the matter of defraying the expenses of and in connection with its erection be left entirely to the discretion and management of the Stewards, who are hereby empowered if they consider such a course necessary or desirable in the interests of the Club to raise the whole or any portion of the amount required to cover the said expenses, upon such terms and in such manner as they may consider best for the interests of the Club."

Mr. JOHN ANDREW—I beg to second the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN—I am sure we shall be very pleased to answer any questions which you would care to put to us or give any further information you would like to have. If no gentleman has any remark to offer I will put the proposition.

The resolution was then carried unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN—We shall have to call you together again in a fortnight to confirm the resolution just passed.

This concluded the meeting.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE HAPPY VALLEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS."

DEAR SIR,—Your leading article on the above in to-day's issue, though containing a good deal of sound common sense, yet oversteps the mark in many ways.

As far as football and hockey matches go the public convenience is most carefully studied and no match takes place which has not been arranged for beforehand. "Rival" teams exist only in the imagination of the writer of the article and the goal posts are always pitched in the same places, there being two football grounds and one hockey ground, and as the most perfect understanding exists between those Clubs and the various military and naval Clubs who use the football grounds, it follows that there is no clashing of fixtures, and the only rivalry is for "supremacy."

The writer is evidently not aware that a Committee for looking after the interests of all Clubs has been in existence for the last two years, such Committee having been appointed by the Government and consisting of delegates from the several sporting clubs in the Colony, and anyone having any suggestions to make in the interests of any particular club or proposed club has only to apply to this Committee to obtain the fullest consideration of his suggestion. I understand this Committee have for some time had in view the formation of cricket pitches on the site of the former pond, but time has to be allowed in order to permit the ground to settle. When I read the remarks about broken bottles, orange peel, chalk marks, and huge holes it struck me that the article must have been written by some one who had been taking a leading part in the recent festivities. Broken bottles are not to be found on the football or hockey ground, at any rate. If chalk marks destroy the grass, what price the Cricket Ground? Watering and rolling will do a great deal no doubt but, if I remember rightly, the golf greens and R.E. cricket ground were specially laid down, the ordinary turf being of very poor quality. No doubt a good deal could be done and ought to be done by the Government in the way of levelling and filling up the ground, especially at the south end, and it is to be hoped that these greatly needed improvements will be undertaken promptly at the commencement of the rainy season.—Yours faithfully,

W. H. WALLACE.

RUSSIAN AND CHINESE INFLUENCE IN MONGOLIA.

In the course of a very interesting but lengthy paper by M. N. Yadrantseff, of the Russian Geographical Society, descriptive of a "Journey to the upper waters of the Orkhon and the ruins of Karakorum," translated by Mr. M. F. A. Fraser, and read before the China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society at Shanghai by Dr. Edkins, the following reference to the relations of Russia and China to Mongolia is of political importance:—

Passing from the Mongolia of the past to the Mongolia of the present we would say a few words on our relations with that country. We are brought into relations with it of importance as a considerable portion of it is conterminous with southern Siberia. Through Mongolia goes our road to China; at Urga, Ulissutai, and Kobdo there are already Chinese merchants; through Urga the tea of China is brought to Kiakhta. Mongolia can no longer threaten Europe or us with the invasion of her hordes, the Mongol is now slave of China; under the influence of Buddhism which reached her through Thibet, the moral, spiritual, and economical aspirations of Mongolia have undergone a great change. Everywhere on mountain and plain, side by side with the yourts of the Nomads are found lama monasteries or kurons, which form centres for settled life to group itself around, and spread their influence over the entire surrounding population. Chinese influence is seen in Mongolia both in the administrative sphere and in the economical or trade. Chinese fashions have impressed their stamp on Mongol existence; the Mongols wear Chinese textures, use Chinese industrial productions, and Chinese traders settle under the walls of Mongol monasteries. In Urga, that prime centre of Buddhism in north-east Mongolia, numbering 10,000 monks within its walls, two conflicting civilizations are seen together striving for the mastery. Lamaite purism and pietism with Chinese rationalism, practicability, and animal epicurism. The Chinese is more cultured than the Mongol, but he exercises no intellectual or moral influence over him; in those domains the Thibetan monk occupies the first place. The grafting of Buddhism on Mongol life showed an awakening of moral and spiritual aspirations in that people. Buddhism among the Mongols must be considered a step onwards in civilization; a greater step lies before the Mongols when they become subjected as they must soon to the influence of European civilization instead of Thibetan and Chinese. Whence is this influence to come? Evidently from the Russian outposts of civilization near Mongolia's frontiers; such centres as the towns of Kiakhta where were concluded our treaties with China, and the Russian factories in Chinese towns, as for example in Urga. It is a pity that notwithstanding relations of long date and several treaties concluded during the last century, the influence of our civilization on our neighbour Mongolia has been so insignificant. Time, however, is doing its work. Russian productions are finding their way in greater and greater quantities into Mongolia. We found there Russian axes, Russian nails, and Russian woollen cloth. The Mongol shares in the Kiakhta trade both as a middleman and as a carrier. On the borders relations have been placed on a solid basis. Urga has a Russian Consulate-General, established for the support of our countrymen and their commerce. Between the Chinese Maimatchin and the lama temples of Urga have arisen Russian buildings, the residence of a consul, and a Russian church. It is proposed to institute there a school for interpreters. Russian bridges are being built over Mongolian rivers, and it is hoped that soon regular Russian stations will be established between Urga and Kiakhta. There are Russian shops in Urga, and there can be seen specimens of our products. These will no doubt acquire a more extensive sale in Mongolia in proportion with the increase of manufacturing activity in Siberia. But although in the purely economic sphere we have not yet gained many triumphs we have a power to help us, the power of enlightenment and real civilization which will yet be triumphant over the lamaism and Buddhistic influence which yet hold the field. In this coming conflict we have useful allies in our native fellow-subjects east of Lake Baikal, the Buriats, who now present an interesting example of a growing civilization yet in a transition stage between nomadism and settled agricultural and commercial life. These Buriats, who have something of the Mongol and something of the Russian, form a connecting link between the two peoples, and through their intermediation Mongolia is constantly gaining a better knowledge of what Russian nationality and Russian culture mean.

Of late unnecessary alarm has been expressed about the spread of Buddhism and lamaism in the Za-Baikal territory, or Transbaikal, the region lying east of that immense lake. These apprehensions are founded on false conceptions of the situation. Although Buddhism may have gained ground there in the very remote past, there is nothing to fear from it in the future. From our own ethnographical observations of the life of the Buriats and other natives of Za-Baikal, we are convinced that lamaism there is not to be compared as a force with lamaism in Mongolia. There it is lord and master of the land; here only a tolerated guest and stranger in the land. The leaven of lamaism was laid in Mongolia by learned and saintly Thibetan monks. The influence of Thibet in our Siberian territories was never powerful and the propagandists of lamaism among our Buriats were and are Mongols, volt was in progress, the widows of the late Mahdi arrayed themselves in uniforms, and, arming themselves with spears, drew up around their zereba for the purpose of defending it. At the same time a number of Baggara horsemen began looting the town, but they were stopped by other Baggaras. The greatest uproar and disorder prevailed in every part of the town. The Under-Khalifa Helu and others vainly attempted to mediate and restore order, and it was not until the 26th ult. that a temporary compromise was arrived at, the Jehadieh blacks still standing to arms round the mosque and the Khalifa's house. On the following day further rioting occurred, and amid the general confusion the refugees contrived to make good their escape. Father Ohrwalder does not think the riots amid which he and his companions escaped will be attended by any serious consequences.

THE KHALIFA.

The Khalifa Abdulla has from the first been the real instigator and director of the Mahdist movement. The late Mahdi was really little more than a figure-head. The Khalifa is now forty-three years of age. He is badly marked by smallpox, is lame, and cannot read, but is a good preacher. He is growing much less active, owing to the luxurious life of self-indulgence which he leads. His harem consists of 150 carefully selected Soudanese beauties. The Khalifa realizes that it is useless to try to extend his power. He attributes the constant failure of his offensive excursions solely to the presence of the British in Egypt. It is, therefore, probable that in the future he will content himself with acting entirely on the defensive, as he fears Great Britain more than either Turkey or Egypt. Repeated attempts have been made by the Khalifa to conciliate the hostile tribes; but Father Ohrwalder believes he is quite incapable of establishing sound government, his sole principle of action being that might is right, while his cupidity and cruelty are unbounded. Mahdism, the refugees think, is really dying out.

EMIN PASHA.

It is believed in Omdurman that Emin Pasha will be able to restore authority in the Equatorial provinces; but Father Ohrwalder does not think Emin will try to push northwards, as the Mahdi Chief Zaki is at Fashoda with a strong force and would be almost certain to bar his further passage. At Dongola there are now about 1,200 Jehadieh blacks and some 5,000 Arabs under Yunis. Father Ohrwalder is strongly in favour of the reoccupation of the Soudan, where the people simply writhe under the horrible cruelty and oppression of the Baggaras. He also urges that the present is a favourable moment for an advance, as the longer it is delayed the more difficult it will be. The Khalifa is determined to prevent Kassala from falling into the hands of the Italians, and it is rumoured that an expedition consisting of 1,000 Jehadieh blacks and 3,000 Arabs is being organised at Omdurman, and will be sent to Kassala to defend that town. It is thought they may attack the Italians at Biska, which the Khalifa considers his country. The export trade of the Soudan is entirely in the hands of the Jaalin traders. There are still seventy-five European men, women, and children at Omdurman. All the late General Gordon's clothing and other effects have been destroyed.

THE HUMOURS OF HIGHLAND SMUGGLING.

To the January number of Good Words the author of "Stronby" contributes an entertaining article upon Highland smugglers and their ways. The Celt has never been able to understand that there is any real immorality in "disobeying the Excise." As the writer remarks:—With him it has always been an article of faith that there is nothing wrong in taking a stick from the wood or a fish from the stream, to which he would add the making of a little whisky when he has any barley to spare for the purpose. Many of the well-known "men" of the north have thought that there was nothing reprehensible in the practice; and ministers in the good old times have had their masses supplied with "mountain dew" for which no duty has ever been paid, and been known to prefer it very much to the legitimate product. The moral sense of the Celt has always regarded what is called smuggling as an offence of a very venial kind, if it be an offence at all.

THE INCREASE OF SMUGGLING.

The resuscitation of Highland smuggling, of which (we read) there can be no doubt, is due to various causes. The staff of excisemen was largely reduced in Scotland. Barley has been cheap. Owing to the crofter agitation, there has been a breach in the friendly relations between proprietor and people, and the moral influence of the former in this, as in other matters, has greatly decreased. But perhaps the chief reason is that malt, which formerly was allowed to be manufactured by no one without a licence, is permitted to be freely made. The smuggler can either make it or buy it openly, and he is now only liable to be pounced upon by the exciseman while he is engaged in turning the malt into whisky. The risk of detection is thus greatly minimized.

HOW CONTRABAND WHISKY IS MADE.

The process of making whisky by the "wee still" is a very simple one, and requires no great chemical knowledge. An old hand at the business with whom we once foregathered described to us the primitive method with as much fervour as a scientist could describe an important experiment in his laboratory. "You see," he said, as he tapped his snuff-mull, "the way to make the good speerit is not an easy way at all; but I will make it plain to you, so you can practise it without deefficulty. First the barley is put into bags and in a running water to soak, it. Then it is put in a room underground covered over with wood and divots. You could walk over the place without knowing what was there—it was just like what the Word says of treasure hid in a field. Ay, many a time I thought on that, people moving all about it and over it, and never knowing it was there! Then it was taken to the kiln. This was a business of great deefficulty, for the smoke would let people know what was going on, you see. But, howsomever, it had to be done. The malt was pieced on cross-straw, and it was dried by a fire of peats in a hole below. It's the peat, you know, that gave it the fine taste. Ach! not like what they call a 'blend.' Them and their blends! But, as the minister says, to proceed. When the malt was dry it was bruised or ground in the mill, and after that it was carried on the back of a horse or man to the bothy, and he would be a clever fellow that would find it there. Then they put the ground malt in casks with water to what you call ferment, and a boy or lassie was left to stir it with a stick of willow or the birch. Then they placed the stuff which was in the casks in the still. The still was made of copper just so large as could be carried on the back of one man. If there was no money to buy a copper we used to get one of tin, though it is not so good. The crooked pipe or worm that was screwed into the still must have water always running over it to keep it cool, and so the bothy was always beside a stream. The whisky came pouring out of the worm into a tub below. Ay, it was a grand spout! The same thing was done a second time, with not so much heat, and a small piece of soap was put in to make the whisky clear. Then the work was done, and what we had then to do was to drink it and to sell it. Where will you get the like of it to-day?"

"TORCHLIGHT PROCESSION."

This description, taken down from the lips of an "old hand," we believe accurately describes the process of making smuggled whisky; but it must be confessed that the product does not by any means merit the commendation, loud and long, which he bestowed upon it. It is full of acids and oils that have not been eliminated, and all the ingredients are present which contribute naturally to the production of a "big headache," but it has always been, and is still, highly favoured by the Highlander. He has no appreciation of judicious blending. He likes something that can grip the throat, and which feels as it goes "like a torchlight procession"!

SOME SMUGGLING ANECDOTES.

A certain John Campbell, of Rannoch, was employed in Edinburgh as a detective. His wife died, and he took her remains to the churchyard of his native district. He brought the hearse that conveyed them back to Edinburgh full of smuggled whisky and said he had "left the body in Rannoch but took the speerit back with him!" A Fortingal man went to Perth with a cartload of whisky. The innkeeper to whom it was consigned refused to pay him his price. Being a stranger in town, he requested the publican to direct him to some one who would be likely to give him what he asked. He was furnished with the number in a certain street. On knocking at the door a gentleman came out whom he asked if he wished any smuggled whisky. He replied by desiring to know who had sent him there, as he was the exciseman. The man told him frankly. "Return," said the gauger, "and sell him your whisky for whatever he will give, and leave town immediately." A few hours after the officer went to the inn, seized the whisky, and got the innkeeper severely fined. On one occasion the excise came upon a man in a bothy in Strathearn. They seized the only cask full at the time, and spent the night in a neighbouring inn, making jolly in an upper room with their friends, one of them sitting on the cask to make sure of its safety. Some of the friends of the smuggler were of the party and took note of the exact position of the cask. They got an augur, bored a hole through the plank ceiling into the cask, drained every drop of it into a tub, and returned the stuff to the smuggler.

A WOMAN OF MEANS.

[By Adeline Sergeant.]

"There's nothing else to be done, Geoff: you must marry a woman of means, or the old place will fall about our ears."

This speech had haunted Geoff's mind ever since it was first uttered; and he could not get rid of it, even while he tried to abandon himself to the soul-enervating influences of Egyptian moonlight, of a cool and flower-decked verandah, of the soft strains of the best stringed band in Cairo, and the conscious-ness that the prettiest girl in the place was in dangerous proximity to him. He had decided, soon after hear'ng Sir Arthur's speech, that he would, if possible, "marry money;" and it did not seem unlikely that he should do so, seeing that he was young, handsome, well-bred, and the possessor in futuro of a title. The baronetcy was an old one, and Sir Arthur Otis's house was of indisputable beauty and antiquity; but money sadly wanted to keep up its decaying glories, and Geoffrey, the son and heir, had pledged himself to marry as his father had suggested—"a woman of means."

It was more through accident than design that he was spending a winter in Egypt. He had gallantly escorted an invalid aunt from England to Cairo in November; and once there, the charm of the semi-Eastern life had laid hold of him. He looked at the Pyramids, he rode on donkeys, he frequented the Cairene bazaars, he went to big English parties at the Consulate and elsewhere, and he liked it all. There was some talk of his going up the Nile with a friend in a dahabeyah, but in this project he was not exactly serious; for before even the month of December was over, he had apparently met his fate, or in his friend Granfel's more colloquial speech, "was booked," and "no good for anything." The person who had worked this miracle was an American widow, a Mrs Engledine, who had taken a house in Cairo for the winter.

She was fairly young—though not so young as Geoff might have wished her—she was plump and pretty: she was fashionable, as far as her lights permitted, and she was undeniably rich. Oh yes, she was rich. Her frocks all came from Paris, she had troops of Arab servants, as well as a French maid and a companion, and she had taken one of the best furnished houses in Cairo—one that had belonged to an English official who had gone home on sick leave. She was wealthy and she was good-natured; and Geoffrey felt that he had done his duty to his old father and the ancestral oaks and beeches when he asked Kate Engledine to be his wife. He did it very soon after making her acquaintance. Their engagement was announced on Christmas Day. And then Mr. Otis drew a long breath, felt that he had (for the present, at least) done his duty, and began to look about him.

Looking about him, his eyes fell upon Mrs. Engledine's companion, and it occurred to him that she was an exceedingly pretty girl. She was nineteen, delicately fair, golden-haired and grey-eyed: silent in general, but able to talk well on occasions—a very interesting girl. She wore black, and did not go much into society, but as Mr. Otis spent a great deal of his time at Mrs. Engledine's house, he had plenty of opportunities of cultivating her acquaintance. Whenever his Kate was busy, changing her dress, writing notes, or consulting with her maid, she was in the habit of saying—"Lina dear, do go and talk to poor Geoff. Do keep him amused till I come. You needn't hurry, Stephanie: Miss Drew will take care of Mr. Otis. Do you think it should be blue and green?"—or white and gold, or anything else that her fancy suggested at the moment; while Lina Drew, the poor companion, in her plain black frock, paid to do all that her mistress suggested, went to the drawing-room or the verandah, or wherever Mr. Otis might happen to be, and entertained him for hours at a time.

The natural result followed.

As Geoff leaned over the railing of the verandah and looked hopelessly at the moonlight on the feathery palms in the walled garden outside his hostess's house, he said to himself that he had got into the worst mess he was ever in, and that he would give a good deal never to have come to Egypt, never to have seen Mr. Engledine, and, above all, never to have supposed himself capable of marrying a woman only for her money.

He was not alone on the verandah. Lina was beside him: her golden hair and white neck thrown into strong relief by her slimy black draperies. She had a cluster of white roses at her bosom and no other ornament. To Geoffrey's mind she needed none.

"You are not dancing, Miss Drew?"

"You know I don't dance just now. I have no heart for dancing."

Geoffrey paused for a moment. "It was your father, was it not?" he said softly, with a glance at her black dress.

"Yes; my dear, dear father. I had no one else—and now I am quite alone."

"You have friends."

"Have I?"

"There is—Mrs. Engledine."

She smiled and then sighed. "Oh yes, Kate is very good-natured. I am very fond of her. She was an old friend of my father's. But of course I shall cease to live with her before long."

"Why need you do that?"

"Oh—when she is married, Mr. Otis, she will not want me."

"Why should she not? Why should you be cast adrift? If I have anything to do with it I may tell you that I shall always be glad if you can stay with her—make your home with her, with us, you know—never go away again——"

Then some new and rather inexplicable feeling caused him to pause. He resumed in a quieter tone: "I can't bear to think of your being thrown on the world alone and having to work for your living."

"Certainly it is not the life that my poor father designed for me," said Lina with a little bitterness. Then, more gently: "You are extremely kind, Mr. Otis; but I don't suppose Mrs. Engledine will want me."

"But I want you!" he cried, without thinking what the words implied. Then, seeing her look rather white and scared in the pale moonlight, he broke forth impetuously: "Yes, I do want you, and I never knew—never thought—Oh, Lina, my darling! you're crying!"

So she was. And the immediate effect of her tears was to make Mr. Otis forget for the moment all dictates of prudence, duty, and honour, and take her in his arms and kiss her dainty lips.

He was ashamed of himself as soon as he remembered what he had done. But her tears revealed to him the strength of an emotion of which he had been before only vaguely conscious. He felt horribly guilty, as he stood with his arm round her and waited for her to speak.

A sense of guilt does not, however, avert discovery and punishment from the wrong-doer. That kiss, that embrace, during which Lina's head lingered rather longer than was strictly necessary on Geoffrey's shoulder, had been witnessed from an open window behind them by no less a person than Mrs. Engledine herself.

"Shakes alive!" said Mrs. Engledine, quite audibly. "Now what's the meaning of this, I should like to know? Do tell!"

Audible as were these characteristic remarks, they passed unheeded by Lina and Geoffrey, who just then absorbed in one another to the entire exclusion of the outer world. This fact was observed by Mrs. Engledine, who remained at the window for a minute or two longer, carefully screening herself by a silken curtain that was waving in the evening breeze.

"Mr. Otis, how dare you?" That was what she heard Lina say. "What have I done that you should insult me in this way?"

"Lina, forgiveness: it was my love for you——"

"For me, and you engaged to Mrs. Engledine! I will never speak to you again!"

"I know I was wrong," said Geoffrey, humbly; "I've made an awful mistake. I never ought to have asked Mrs. Engledine to marry me——"

"But having done it," Lina flashed out at him, "you will please keep your word."

At which point Mrs. Engledine smiled and withdrew. "That girl's clear grit—all through," she said to herself; "but Master Geoff deserves a little punishment, and I think he'll get it."

Then, with a complete disregard of her guests, some of whom were dancing, others feeding and flirting, and others streaming out upon the verandah in a way which was likely to interfere very seriously with the young couple's tête-à-tête, she slipped quietly off to her own bedroom and locked herself in.

There was a long mirror in the room. She drew a chair before it, sat down, and inspected herself.

She certainly saw a very handsome woman. Kate Engledine was dark, plump, crimson-cheeked, downy-skinned: she had magnificent black eyes, and an incredible quantity of curly black hair. She knew how to make the best of herself in all points too; and she could not have chosen a more becoming dress than the yellow satin, which displayed the abundant charms of her white shoulders and dimpled arms, and billowed on the floor beside her in the folds of a ridiculously ample train, beneath which the white lace balayeuse made itself very evident. There were diamonds in her black hair and on her bodice: in fact, she was a very dazzling vision, and she was piqued to find that Geoffrey did not think her so.

"I suppose I look my age," she said, regarding herself critically. "Forty, if I'm a day; and Lina's just nineteen. The buds always carry it with a man of Geoff's age. After all, why should I worry myself? It wouldn't be bad fun to be 'my lady;' but I ain't, go-be bad fun to be 'my lady;' but I ain't, going to have a husband always hankering around for somebody else. No, thank you, Mr. Otis. And what's Geoff Otis, anyway? When I think of the men who've made love to me in this very house, why, I smile. If only poor dear Stephen hadn't gone off the hooks so suddenly, I shouldn't be losing around Europe and Africa this way. I reckon I'd give a good bit to have Stephen here just now. He'd soon settle affairs for all three of us."

A knock at the door aroused her. The French maid had brought her a card, with the information that a strange gentleman was in the white salon—a little room generally used by card-players, but at present untenanted by guests. Mrs. Engledine gave a little scream, as her eyes rested on the card. She gathered up her train and flew to the salon, where she closed the door hastily behind her—though not before the care of the watchful Stéphanie had caught a sentence which she did not altogether understand.

"Stephen, Stephen, I thought you were dead!"

Half-an-hour later, when Geoffrey was gloomily pulling his moustache in a dark corner of the verandah, and wondering whether he had not better go back to his hotel, the quick tap of a fan on his arm and a semi-jocose greeting told him that his retreat had been discovered by Mrs. Engledine.

"All in the dark, dear boy! The moonlight is jolly, isn't it? Is there a chair in that corner? All right: let me sit down, and you come here—close to me; I've something awfully important to talk to you about."

The words were uttered so loudly that two or three wanderers on the verandah instantly drew back, and an unwonted solitude was created around the pair. Geoffrey groaned, but came close to her as he was bid; and—with a feeling of not unmerited shame and pain—allowed her to take his ungloved hand in hers.

"What a cold hand! And yet it's a warm night. Geoff, dear, an old friend of mine from the States has turned up. He's been travelling, and heard in Alexandria that I was here, so just came along. He's brought me bad news."

"I'm sorry to hear it, Kate."

"I'm sure you will be when you know what it is. Though you won't be so much disgruntled by it as many a man would be: you sin't mercenary, I know. I've lost every dollar of my money, Geoff: I haven't a red cent of my own. It's all been lost—he'll tell you how, if you like to know. But of course this alters everything; and so I'm going to give you back your word: it would be real mean of me to expect you to marry me now."

There was just one moment's pause. Then Geoffrey spoke.

"My dear Kate," he said, "it's very good of you to come and tell me this. But of course it does not make the slightest difference. Indeed, if there is any difference, it is that I can now beg you to marry me without any delay."

"That's very sweet of you," said Mrs. Engledine, "but are you sure you mean it, Geoffrey? What will the old folks say? I was beginning to think how jolly it would be to put that old Priory of yours to rights. We shan't be able to do that, you know. Eh? Don't you think you'd better give me the go-by? I give you leave."

"It's plain you don't believe much in my sense of honour, or my—my love," said Geoffrey desperately.

"Well, perhaps I don't, I'm used to men, and I only want to be business-like," said Mrs. Engledine briskly. "I shan't die of a broken heart, you know, if we do break it off. And it ain't quite fair to you to come penniless——"

"Kate, my dear, don't make me think myself a selfish brute," said Geoffrey. "If you are poor now, don't you see that it is all the more my task to care for you and work? I'm not a good match, but I'll do my best to make you happy, whether we are rich or poor, and—don't you think I had better speak to Mr. Duncan to-night? I saw him here just now."

"Why, what a hurry you're in!" cried Mrs. Engledine. For Mr. Duncan was the clergyman. "But you're real good, Geoff, I'll say that for you; and honest—after all."

"After all!" repeated Geoff, rather fiercely. "Why, you didn't think that I should break my word, did you?"

"Well, I did not know," said Kate. "Circumstances alter cases. Suppose you cared for somebody else—what then?"

"Don't put such improbable cases," he said, trying to laugh—but there was a quiver of pain in his voice which Mrs. Engledine was quite clever enough to understand. "But—well, if you insist on it—I can only say that in any case I shall never break my word. Least of all, if the woman who promised to be my wife were in poverty or sickness or trouble of any kind."

"So you won't give me up?"

"No."

"That's awkward," said Kate, with a gay little laugh. Then, as he started with amazement at her tone, she rose, slipped her hand within his arm, and continued: "Suppose you take me to the little white parlour. I've left my New York friend there, and he'll be lonesome. He can tell you more about my lost fortune than I can, too."

The guests were departing. Mrs. Engledine steered her way very cleverly through the little crowd, refusing to be detained a moment longer. She made her way—still holding Geoffrey by the arm—into the white salon; and then, to nobody's very great surprise, Geoffrey tore himself away from her and uttered a sharp and rather strong exclamation. For Lina was there, and Lina was clasped in the arms of a tall, lean, brown-faced man with a grizzled moustache, which was just now in close proximity to the girl's soft cheek. Geoffrey had resigned her—had pledged himself once more to Kate Engledine—but he was human, and to see Lina in another man's arms—and so soon—was rather a trial to his equanimity.

Kate laughed aloud, and Lina looked up, blushing and smiling; but to Geoffrey's amaze she did not withdraw herself from the tall man's encircling arms.

"You'd better introduce the gentleman, Lina, my dear," said Mrs. Engledine. "It's my friend from New York, Mr. Otis."

"And my father, Mr. Otis," said Lina, with glistening eyes. "Colonel Drew—Mr. Otis."

"Happy to make your acquaintance, sir," said the Colonel. "Yes, they thought me dead, it seems; and when I came back to New York, I found that Kate and Lina had levanted. I'm afraid I'll have to trouble you to hand over Mrs. Engledine, sir. I've a prior claim, you see."

"A prior claim?"

"I was engaged to Colonel Drew before he went on the voyage, when he was reported drowned—and ruined," said Mrs. Engledine, demurely. "I thought that I might make matters right for him by persuading you to give me up when you heard I'd lost my fortune, but you wouldn't be persuaded."

"Oh, I see," said Geoffrey. Then a light burst upon him, and, in spite of himself, he laughed. "Couldn't think of standing in your way, Colonel," he said.

"Well, that's very handsome of you, Sir," said the Colonel. "You see I can't undertake to give Kate up, so I'm afraid I should have had to shoot you if you wouldn't calm down. But there's one way of making things equal, I think. There's my daughter Lina—suppose you take her instead? We could have a double wedding then, and fix things up comfortable. I've made my pile, and Lina can hold her own, although I may not exactly be a millionaire."

What could the two young people do but blush and stammer, and finally join hands? And when they had gone so far, Mrs. Engledine burst into a peal of laughter, which was re-echoed by the Colonel with a thoroughly mirth-provoking guffaw.

"Oh, you silly boy!" said Kate. "Don't you see that I've played you a trick? I saw you and Lina on the balcony to-night, and I guessed the truth. So when Stephen unexpectedly appeared, we planned a little surprise for you. He didn't want to give his daughter away to a man that he knew nothing about; so we thought we would see how you took it when I said I'd lost my fortune. If you had tried to back out of your engagement to me, you would never have got Lina. Sir—and I should have married the Colonel all the same. But as things have turned out, you'll be better able to build up the Priory than if you had married me; for although I haven't lost my fortune at all, Lina will be just about twice as rich as I am.—And I wish you joy. It was real lucky for all of us that the Colonel turned up in the very nick of time!"

So that was how it was that Geoffrey Otis came to marry "a woman of means."—La Lorgnon Figaro.
